Аннотация:

One of the highest forms of development of the state is a political and economic system in which every citizen is guaranteed a decent standard of living and a wide range of social benefits. The authors of this article propose to consider various options of models of social states and their special features from a legal and economic point of view. It is proposed to consider the relationship between business, government and society. Creating a product and creating a certain level of profit, the business plays an indirect but vital role in safeguarding of civil rights and freedoms. There is a direct relationship between levels of economic and democratic development, environmental protection and social conditions. And understanding of this aspect ensures the welfare of the state in social development from different sides. The article demonstrates the authors' analysis using 2 methods: method of comparative analysis and method of expert evaluations. Recommendations for the creation of the social state are given.
